Distinguished Speaker Series with Edward H. Haertel, PhD

Rethinking School Accountability for California

Professor Haertel will discuss California’s extraordinary opportunity to rethink school accountability, develop measures reflecting different aspects of school performance beyond test scores, consider logic models, and ultimately design the best possible system.

Edward Haertel is Jacks Family Professor of Education, Emeritus, at Stanford University and holds a Ph.D. in measurement, evaluation, and statistical analysis from the University of Chicago. His research centers on policy uses of achievement tests, validity arguments for high-stakes testing, the logic and implementation of standard setting methods, trend comparisons across tests, and the examination of value-added models for teacher evaluation from a psychometric perspective.
