We are especially interested in scholars who focus on open-access postsecondary institutions (e.g., community colleges) and who examine issues and challenges related to the success of these organizations and their students. We invite scholars who utilize the disciplinary lenses of the social sciences, multidisciplinary approaches, or critical theory perspectives in the study of Education. Primary teaching responsibilities will be in our Capital Area North Doctorate in Educational Leadership (CANDEL) Ed.D. program.

Responsibilities: Conducting and maintaining a productive research program; publishing; teaching graduate and undergraduate courses; advising masters’ and doctoral students; developing connections with community colleges and higher education institutions and other campus faculty; collaborating with colleagues in enhancing the diversity of graduate cohorts; and serving on School and University committees.

Qualifications: An advanced degree (Ph.D. or Ed.D.) is required. Preference will be given to candidates whose scholarship addresses issues of cultural, linguistic, and economic diversity in college access and success; and who have worked in higher education (especially open access); and/or whose research focuses on community colleges and the students who attend these institutions.
