

UC DAVIS SCHOOL OF EDUCATION AND THE GRADUATE GROUP IN EDUCATION PRESENT

Education Career Chats

A Professional Development Series Highlighting Non-Academic Post-doctoral Pathways

Dr. Paco Martorell

Professor & Chair of the Graduate Group in Education, School of Education, UC Davis

Tuesday, May 14, 2024, 12–1 pm

School of Education Building, Room 174
UC Davis No RSVP required but space is limited.

The Education Career Chats Series provides UC Davis doctoral students an opportunity to learn from individuals who earned doctoral degrees in education and landed jobs outside of academe. Speakers will also share information about potential internship and job opportunities within their workplaces and other organizations.

Dr. Francisco (Paco) Martorell is a professor and chair of the Graduate Group in Education at the UC Davis School of Education. He has broad research interests in both higher education and K-12 policy. Current projects cover areas including developmental education in colleges, the effects of grade retention, the returns to for-profit colleges, the impacts of school facility investments, and community college tuition subsidies. He also has conducted research on health care including studies examining the economic costs of dementia as well as research on the economic and educational consequences of military service.

Dr. Martorell joined the UC Davis School of Education faculty as an assistant professor in 2014, and was previously an economist at the RAND Corporation and a professor at the Pardee RAND Graduate School. He earned his PhD in economics at UC Berkeley, and his BA in economics and mathematics at Carleton College.

For questions or more information, please visit education.ucdavis.edu/career-chats-martorell.

