How the Arts Can Save Education:
Transforming Teaching, Learning, and Instruction

Wednesday, May 11, 2022 • 1 pm Program, 2:30 pm Reception
Putah Creek Lodge, UC Davis Campus

Erica Rosenfeld Halverson shares a bold vision for reimagining our struggling education system. in her new book, drawing on 25 years as a researcher and teaching artist to offer a blueprint for all classrooms where students and teachers can take risks, collaborate, and work creatively. She calls for a change in what counts as good teaching and learning, redefined by building learning environments with the arts at the center.

Dr. Erica Rosenfeld Halverson is a trained theater artist and award-winning professor and chair in the Department of Curriculum and Instruction at the University of Wisconsin–Madison, where she teaches a range of courses to undergraduates and graduate students, including future teachers. She is a field leader in the learning sciences, creating a sub-field that focuses on how people learn in and through the arts, as well as a seasoned performer and co-founder of two community youth arts programs.
